

Product Facts

- A happy egg farm is a minimum of 8 acres for a flock of 16,000 hens. This is about the size of six football fields or 21.8 square feet per bird, which is nearly 11 times larger than most free range standards.
- Our hens are happy because they engage in natural behaviors with daily access to:
 - Outdoor pasture with established or newly planted trees from 10AM thru dusk (average 8-9 hours per day)
 - Wooden perching towers (play kits) and sand pits for dust-bathing on the range; dust bathing is a hen's natural way of getting clean
 - Pecking toys inside the barn, plus private nest boxes so our hens can select their favorite nesting box for laying eggs
 - Clean water and a specially formulated diet of corn and soy supplemented by their outdoor pasture foraged diet
- The happy egg co is the only 100% free range egg brand with an animal welfare program that covers everything from living conditions to feed and the expertise of the caregivers
- The happy egg co. farms are located in Arkansas and Missouri that have large, open pastures with lots of trees and grass and a mild year round climate so hens can go outdoors everyday. In addition, the farms are close to grain fields, helping to keep our carbon footprint low. Our farmers are selected because they are outstanding animal stewards who are passionate about improving the lives of the hens they care for everyday
- Our girls are from a range of breeds that always lay brown eggs. Our first flocks are Bovan Browns, a hybrid known for its egg-laying ability and easy going temperament
- The hens are fed a high-quality specially formulated recipe of corn and soy mixed with vitamins and minerals for the best nutrition for healthy hens and great eggs. (The feed never has added meat, bone meal, hormones, or antibiotics.)
- Eggs that are very fresh are extremely difficult to peel, near impossible if you want them to look pretty. As a tip, if you plan to boil eggs, try keeping them in the fridge for a week or two to age them before hand.
